Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice, and peace in the world.

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations in 1948. It was the first international human rights document and a milestone in the global struggle for human rights and equality.

The Declaration contains 30 articles, each of which outlines a specific human right, ranging from the right to life, liberty, and security of person to the right to freedom of religion and belief.

The Declaration has been translated into over 500 languages and is recognized as a key instrument in the promotion and protection of human rights. It has inspired countless national and international human rights laws and has been complemented by many other human rights instruments.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights is not a legally binding instrument, but it has been widely endorsed by governments and is considered a standard against which other human rights norms are measured. It remains a powerful symbol of the struggle for human rights and a call to action for individuals, governments, and international organizations to promote and respect the fundamental rights and freedoms of all people.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights continues to be an important reference point in the continued struggle for human rights.

The Human Rights Logos project, initiated by the Human Rights Watch, aims to create a logo that will serve as a global symbol of human rights. The project seeks to design a logo that will be widely recognized and understood as a representation of the universal principles enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The logo will be a universal symbol for human rights, intended to be recognized and understood around the world, serving as a powerful reminder of the importance of the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The logo will be used in a variety of contexts, including human rights reports, campaigns, and advocacy materials, to raise awareness and promote the principles of human rights.
